OPTIONS FOR COMMUNITY ARTS TRAINING & SUPPORT

Prepared for Intermedia Arts
By The Center for the Study of Art & Community
Consultant William Cleveland

In recent years, an increasing number of artists and arts organizations have been joining in partnerships with other community sectors to advance the healthy development of their communities. The result is a proliferation of cross-sector collaborations and opportunities. Some local arts agencies and others have recognized that the organizations and individuals involved in these collaborations could benefit from professional development and skill building that supports effective community arts partnerships.

Over the past 16 years, Intermedia Arts has established its leadership as both a practitioner and an educational resource for the growing arts-based community development movement. The organization's facility and programming have provided a multidisciplinary platform for community members of all ages to create and share arts-based strategies to address community issues. Since its launch in 2002, Intermedia Art's Creative Community Leadership Institute (CCLI) has provided comprehensive training and support for leaders in the upper Midwest, working across community sectors at the intersection of the arts and social development. During that time 231 local leaders from four regional communities have completed the 100-hour CCLI program and joined its growing network of participants.

More recently, Intermedia Arts has begun considering how it can extend the value of its learning resources to other communities. This effort is framed by the following question: How can CCLI's demonstrated benefits be made available in ways that are more accessible for participants and more affordable for local sponsors and supporters? In the spring of 2015, Intermedia Arts asked The Center for the Study of Art & Community for assistance with conducting research to help answer this question.

THE RESEARCH: The ensuing research focused on three principal areas of inquiry. This report summarizes the results of these inquiries in the following three parts:

PART 1: Field Research: A study of local arts agencies across the United States to provide a greater understanding of both the level of community arts activity taking place and the demand for arts-based community development training resources.

PART 2: Field Scan: A survey of the community arts training field to provide a sense of the scope and availability of these types of programs.

PART 3: Design Standards: A set of guidelines and standards developed with CCLI alumni and stakeholders to help frame the design for a new iteration of the program.

PART 1

FIELD STUDY: EXPLORING COMMUNITY ARTS TRAINING AND INTEREST

In the fall of 2015, Intermedia Arts joined with Animating Democracy at Americans for the Arts to sponsor a CSA&C study designed to learn more about where community arts training is currently taking place and where there may be future interest.

The research was undertaken from September 22 to October 9, 2015 by The Center for the Study of Art & Community. The study cohort was comprised of leadership from 423 local arts agencies who had previously indicated their interest and/or involvement in community arts programming in the 2015 Americans for the Arts local arts agency census. The response rate for the 18-day study was a relatively high 34%.

The survey consisted of three sets of Likert scale questions each with multiple items, and five questions soliciting narrative responses. There were three general areas of inquiry. These were:

- Organizational Activity: The level of community arts support and activity undertaken by responding organizations.
- Community Activity: The level of community arts activity and support in the responding organizations constituent communities.
- Interest Level: Respondent interest in future community arts programming as well as support in areas such as training, funding, partnerships, and programming.

KEY DATA

Technical note: The study's Likert instrument used a six-point scale with three "agree" and three "disagree" options. For the purposes of clarity, in most cases, this report will not reflect the third (somewhat agree) and fourth (somewhat disagree) options on the scale. This means that indications of agreement will reflect the percentage of strongly agree and agree responses, and disagreement will reflect the percentage of disagree and strongly disagree responses.

Of specific relevance to Intermedia Arts and its ongoing work in the Upper Midwest, 6% of the study cohort is located in the states of North Dakota, South Dakota, and Minnesota. The data from this subset reflects the general patterns revealed in the full cohort.

I. Cohort Background

The respondents were asked to characterize their communities as urban (32%), rural (43%), or suburban (35%). In terms of size, 28% indicated that they lived in communities with a population of less than 25,000, 32% in communities with between 25,000 and 100,000, and 40% with 100,000 or more.

The range of programs provided by these organizations fits the typical local arts agency profile, with the most prevalent being arts education (72%), presenting and producing (76%), arts advocacy (77%), and grants to arts organizations and artists (50%). The arts areas served followed a similar pattern with the visual arts (95%), music (88%), and theater (75%) topping the list of disciplines.

Less typical, and particularly relevant to the purposes of this study, are the 74% who indicated that they support cross-sector community arts partnerships and the 26% who say they give grants to non-arts organizations. It is also interesting to note that fully 78% of those responding indicate they are involved in public art programming.

We also asked survey participants what they regarded as the most critical issues facing their community. Most responses reflected problems and concerns affecting the broader community as well as (but much more than) those relevant solely to their arts constituencies. Issues that received the most mention included: education, poverty, jobs, housing, crime, and the aging population.

When asked how they saw their mission in light of these critical issues, most said they regarded them as central to their work in and with their communities. Some mentioned that as a result of recent planning initiatives they had broadened their focus from arts-centric to community-centric.

II. Community Arts Activity and Interest

The following summarizes responses to Likert options in the organizational, community, and interest areas described on the previous page. To increase the accuracy of our findings, the following description of the field being explored preceded this section of the survey.

Over the past few years there has been a proliferation of terms describing cultural work designed to advance broader community goals. (Ex. community arts, arts-based community development, art for social change, creative placemaking, social practice).

For the purpose of this survey, the terms "community," or "cross-sector arts partnership" are intended to represent the full spectrum of these community-related arts activities.

ORGANIZATIONAL ACTIVITY

- 74% of the responding organizations agree that cross-sector arts partnerships are central to their mission.
- 85% of responding organizations agree that non-arts organizations are a key constituency, and 75% say they are in active partnerships with non-arts organizations.
- 63% are actively involved in “supporting artists and arts organizations working in partnership with other sectors.” (Ex. human services, public safety, health care, community development).
- 55% report receiving requests from organizations from “other sectors for artist and arts organizations who can work with them.”
- 75% indicate that their most recent strategic planning process addressed “broadening the impact of the arts beyond traditional arts activities and venues.”
- 78% agree with the statement, “we see ourselves as a change agent in our community.”

- Only 18% say they are providing training for artists and/or arts organizations interested in, or involved in, community arts partnerships.

COMMUNITY ACTIVITY:

- 74% of respondents indicated that their communities have an active community arts sector.
- On the other hand, 54% say that there are other organizations in their community that are supporting cross-sector arts activity.
- Community opinions about the arts as contributors to community development are mixed. Specifically, 32% of our respondents agreed with the contention that “the arts are not seen as pertinent to the major issues facing the community.” It is interesting to note that nearly 50% of the responses to this item were split evenly in the middle range (somewhat agree, somewhat disagree) of the scale.
- On the other hand, 54% agree that, “community leaders here regard the arts as critical to our community’s long-term, future development.”

When asked to identify any local, regional or national community arts partnership training programs available to artists and arts organizations in their communities, more than half either identified traditional technical assistance capacity-building programs or were not aware of any.

INTEREST LEVEL

- Support for community arts partnerships is a funding priority for 54% of the responding organizations.
- Interest in fostering new cross-sector arts partnership is very high (90%).
- Most respondents agree that artists (64%) and arts organizations (71%) in their communities have “an interest in applying their skills to address issues facing the broader community.”
- 66% agree that arts organizations “want to establish working partnerships with non-arts organizations in our community.”

There is significant demand for more information about the development of, and support for, community arts partnerships in three areas.

These are:

1. How “community arts partnership can help advance the integration of the arts throughout the broader community” (82%).
2. How “the arts can be integrated into the functions of municipal government” (83%).
3. “Community arts partnership training opportunities” (79%).

► These responses may represent a growing trend among local arts agencies towards deeper levels of community engagement. Along with our Likert items we also asked some narrative questions about how respondents define their missions in light of the broader issues facing the communities they serve. In their responses, many made clear that they see themselves as full partners in the future development of their communities relative to both arts and non- arts issues (ex. affordable housing, youth development, social, economic equity, job creation). Some respondents described their agency’s move from art-centered to community-centered as a critical mission shift.

KEY FINDINGS

► There is both a need for, and high interest in, community arts training. The original impetus for arts partnership training programs in the 1990’s was the recognition by funders that un-tested artists needed new skill sets and support to succeed in community settings. As local arts agencies begin to invest more in cross-community collaborations, it is not surprising that this same awareness is increasing for them as well. Two of the survey’s most divergent findings highlight this point. The first is the strong interest indicated (79%) in “learning about community arts training opportunities.” The second is the small number of organizations (18%) that are actually providing learning opportunities in this area. This finding, along with a general lack of awareness of, and/or access to, existing training opportunities (see below) presents both a challenge and an opportunity for community arts educators.

► There is a low level of awareness of community arts training resources among respondents. Another aspect of this overall research effort has been gathering information about available local, regional, and national community arts training resources. To aid in this effort, we asked respondents to identify any programs they were aware of. Of the 78 that responded to this question only 14 (18%) cited workshops, programs, or conferences that provide training dealing specifically with community arts partnerships. Given the significant number of programs available, there is clearly a disconnect here between the training resources and awareness of those resources. One issue, identified by some from more rural communities, was that they felt that arts training across the board was generally inaccessible, due to the time, money, and travel that is often required.

REGION...THROUGH

► Cross-sector relationships are becoming more prevalent among these agencies. When asked to identify their programmatic activities from among 10 representative local arts agency functions, fully 74% indicated that they “provide support for cross-sector arts partnerships.” Only “arts advocacy” (77%) and “arts presenting” (76%) were named more often. Further, a very high 85% also indicated that they counted non-arts organizations as a core constituency and 75% indicated that they are actively working with organizations from other community sectors.

► There is a very strong interest in the integration of arts into the functions of municipal government. Another area of high agreement (83%) was in response to a statement that measured interest in information about the incorporation of the arts into government service. This is reinforced by reports from Intermedia Arts about the high number of inquiries they have received regarding their Creative Citymaking arts in government initiative.

► Some respondents see a correlation between community-based arts activity and stronger local support for the arts. When asked to describe how support for the arts was trending in their communities fully 63% of the respondents say they have seen an increase in support over the past 5 years. In their narrative responses, many indicated that they felt that some of this rise was attributable to efforts to engage the public more broadly in ways that made culture more “accessible” and “inclusive.” Many (75%) referenced planning efforts that have identified increased community-based engagement strategies as a top priority.

► The impetus for cross-sector arts engagement is coming from both the arts and non-arts sectors. Six of our Likert items sought information about both the level and the sources of local interest concerning arts-based community partnerships. Responses show that both interest and initiative is coming from all directions. On the arts side of the equation, 65% say they are actively supporting cross-sector arts partnerships. Responses also show that respondents feel that there are fairly high interest levels from artists (64%) and arts organizations (71%) in this type of engagement. More than half (55%) of the respondents report receiving requests from other sectors for arts program support.

► Responding organizations are involved in a wide variety of issue and outcome areas. To get a more accurate picture of how our respondents are defining the community arts activity and the field in general we asked them to share the kinds of community issues they are involved with. We also asked what non-arts outcome

Over the last five years support for the arts in your community has:

areas they saw their efforts impacting. The answer choices we provided came from the issue and outcome area taxonomy used by Animating Democracy in the uses in the “Profiles” section of their website.

As you can see from the chart above, three of the issues, three of the issues most cited, cultural policy (82%), education (84%), and youth development (65%) are areas that are often associated with local arts agency programs and services. Economic and Community Development (83%) may include both old and new factors. While many local arts agencies have been making their case for the arts in economic terms for quite a while, it is only recently that significant attention is being paid to creative placemaking as a stimulus for both financial and social capital. Possibly more noticeable, given their strikingly cross-sector nature, are such areas as the environment (31%), civic participation (24%), race relations (23%), and land use (23%).

The outcome areas identified by respondents (see the chart on the right) follow a similar pattern. These responses certainly show that our responding local arts agencies are involved in an increasingly diverse range of community issues and partnerships. These findings might also be seen as an indication of a field in flux. It could be said that many of these organizations are early indicators of a changing cultural landscape, an altered terrain that is already producing new definitions of the role of the arts in community life.

A FIELD SCAN OF COMMUNITY ARTS RELATED TRAINING AND SUPPORT

SCAN SUMMARY

To gain a sense of the scope and availability of community arts training resources and programs, CSA&C conducted a general field scan of community arts related training in the U.S. Given that our aim was to develop a descriptive outline of program types, this scan should not be considered a comprehensive inventory of such programs

The programs described in this report fall into three different categories:

- o Institutes and Training Programs
- o Courses, Workshops and Retreats
- o College and University Programs

A compendium of the information collected in these three areas follows this brief summary. These descriptions provide a fascinating picture of the variety and range of these programs, as well as their significant differences. This diversity of curricular focus and pedagogy also means that many of these programs could be placed in more than one of the above categories.

Defining the Field: The curricular content covered by these programs is too varied to describe here in precise detail. A quick review of this information does provide a window, though, into how these different programs define the field and the skills they feel practitioners need to succeed in it. Here is a breakdown of the most noticeable field definitions we discerned from our examination of program descriptions.

- o Art for social change
- o Arts-based community development
- o Community arts
- o Community cultural development
- o Creative placemaking
- o Cross-sector arts collaboration
- o Cultural animation
- o Cultural community building
- o Cultural mediation
- o Cultural organizing
- o Healing/expressive arts
- o Public art
- o Social practice
- o Socially engaged practice

This proliferation of terms can be viewed as an indicator of increased interest and investment in cultural work that, in some way, engages the public sphere. It can also be seen as an indicator that a realm of contemporary artistic practice, that not too long ago was considered obscure, has now been validated in a variety of ways by people and institutions representing a diversity of perspectives and interests.

The most noteworthy thematic contrast among the programs that we reviewed was a fairly distinct difference in how they define the work in terms of impact. While some programs describe their aims as community change in the realm of “equity” and “social justice,” others express their desired outcomes in terms of “economic and social development.”

Pedagogy and curricula: The following were among the most prevalent curricular subjects and learning strategies used by the programs we reviewed.

- Hands-on field work in community engagement projects
- Live and recorded webinars
- Classroom training: seminars, lectures, small and large group discussion on community development strategies from both an arts and a community development perspective
- In-depth study of exemplars through case studies and presenters
- Arts-based learning and facilitation learning and practice
- Classes on specific arts-based techniques and strategies

- Study and discussion of social change and social justice topics
- Coursework and workshops on race, rank, and privilege
- Coursework and discussion on cultural policy, history, theory and criticism relevant to the field

Relevant Data: Where possible, we collected information about these programs in eight areas. These were: program name, sponsoring organization, the location(s) of the program(s) and their audiences, general program description, duration, types of participants, and cost.

The following is a summary of the programs represented in the two (community-based) categories of programs we studied.

	INSTITUTES AND TRAINING PROGRAMS	COURSES, WORKSHOPS, AND RETREATS
LOCATION / AUDIENCE	31% serve local audiences only. 69% had regional, national and/or international constituencies.	6% serve local audiences only. The remaining 94% had regional, national and/or international constituencies
DURATION	Varies widely (1 day to 9 months) with the majority lasting 3 months or more (100-250 hours).	47% were 3 days or less, with the rest lasting 2-3 weeks or more.
COST	62% charge a fee. The rest are free or encourage a donation up to $350.	54% were free. Those with fees (46%) charged from $50 to $350. A few offered a pay what you can option.

Community Based Program Descriptions: Overall, we feel some of the most relevant data emerging from this field scan comes from the excerpted program descriptions that we have included in the summary chart that begins on the next page (see Institute and Training Programs; Courses, Workshops and Retreats). As such, we believe the best way to appreciate the extraordinary mix of training programs is to review these.

College and University Programs: We identified 126 programs (some with multiple offerings) in 25 states. Of these, 40 were located at private colleges and universities with the rest situated at public institutions. The majority are degree programs with 29 at the BA/BS level, 43 at the Masters level, and 4 PhD programs. There were 50 programs that provided certificates, fellowships and/or internships. The field scan for this data came from our own research and previous studies from multiple sources. These included: The Community Arts Network: Places To Study, Imagining America's The Curriculum Project Report , and The Arts and Healing Network.

As indicated in our introductory comments, this is not a comprehensive study. One academic arena that we feel bears further examination is in the area of cross-disciplinary arts minors. A number of programs we examined described opportunities for non-arts majors in a wide range of disciplines (Ex. public policy, engineering, sociology, education, architecture, etc.) to take an arts minor as a relevant enhancement of their major area of study. These cross-disciplinary studies were viewed as a way for non-arts majors to garner hands-on experience with such subjects as arts-based development, creative problem solving, and design thinking.

INSTITUTES AND TRAINING PROGRAMS

SPONSOR/ PRESENTER: ArtCorp/ (soon to be the Creative Action Institute)

PROGRAM: Creative Leader Certificate Course

LOCATION: Ipswich, MA, Global projec

DESCRIPTION: Since 2000, Artcorp has enriched the environmental, health and human rights initiatives of hundreds of organizations in Central America with creative tools and strategies. In 2012, we compiled our best practices into a dynamic curriculum that we now offer to educators, advocates, and organizations around the globe. Our training, coaching and on-site support challenge those working on the frontlines of social change to see the world through a new lens that questions assumptions and stretches boundaries.

Through experiential, arts-based techniques and an integral approach to human development, our curriculum addresses three areas of behavior change: Individual Empowerment, Community Development, and Systemic Change. Our trainees deepen their own creativity and leadership capacity, while acquiring a toolkit to spread the spark and enhance their external facilitation and collaboration skills, boosting overall effectiveness in the advancement of their missions.

Organizations and individuals alike can take advantage of our follow-up Technical Assistance as they carry out their visions. Our creative team is highly experienced and passionate about working at the intersection of art and social change.

Program Change: Our programs have evolved into a cascading training model to build grassroots networks, widen our scope and deepen impact. The evolution of our model has heralded the transformation of ArtCorps into a new organization in 2016: WThe Creative Action Institute! Stay tuned for more soon!

DURATION: 12 days for a 4 course certificate program. Individual course 3 days (est.)

PARTICIPANTS: Artists, arts administrators, social change activists

SPONSOR/ PRESENTER: A Blade of Grass

PROGRAM: ABOG FELLOWSHIP FOR SOCIALLY ENGAGED ART

LOCATION: New York based, National, International constituency

DESCRIPTION: A Blade of Grass supports individual artists and collectives who are working in leadership roles and in partnership with communities, in ways that are relevant in everyday life, at ambitious scale, to enact social change. The ABOG Fellowship for Socially Engaged Art is an active, year-long funding and learning relationship between ABOG Fellows and A Blade of Grass. Fellows become active members in a cohort and participants in a program that features a range of services, including:

- Project support of $20,000 with minimal restriction (budget line items may include things like living expenses that are not direct project expenses).
- A two-day orientation that explores ABOG's documentation and assessment models, and includes workshops on strategies for community engagement.
- Up to three co-assessment meetings with other Fellows to share progress and challenges, and offer feedback to one another.
- Support and feedback for ongoing self-assessment in the form of collaborative action research.
- Assessment by an outside evaluator. We want to understand how the projects we fund impact communities, and capture and share innovative ideas and successful models for future use.
- ABOG production of a short video documentary on each project.
- Access to our broad network of specialists outside the art world. Ask us how we can help you connect with experts in issues your project addresses!

DURATION: 1 year

PARTICIPANTS: Artists or artist collectives working independently who are US citizens, or US residents with legal work status and have projects that engage directly with a specific community or communities.

SPONSOR/ PRESENTER: Alliance of Artists Communities

PROGRAM: Social Practice Toolkits

LOCATION: Providence, RI, National constituency

DESCRIPTION: While artist residencies have traditionally provided opportunities for artists to work in solitude, many residency programs today are designed specifically around artists engaging the local community. Increasingly, organizations still primarily offering retreat-style residencies are expanding into community-engaged work as well, and looking for best-practices from peers. In response to these significant shifts in the residency field, the Alliance began a discovery project with two guiding questions:

- How can artist residencies be a platform for engaging communities in meaningful and responsible ways?
- What do artists need to succeed in community-engaged work, and how best can residency programs serve those needs?

DURATION: Self-organized

PARTICIPANTS: Online, artists, residency program operators

PROGRAM: The BuildaBridge Annual Institute for Arts & Transformation

LOCATION: Philadelphia, PA, US audience

DESCRIPTION: The BuildaBridge Institute is a training and applied research academy designed to prepare practitioners to integrate the arts effectively in education and community development. Now in its 14th year, the Annual Institute is an intensive experience that provides opportunities for professional development in arts-based methods for healing, empowerment, and community transformation. Artists, teachers, social service professionals, youth workers, non-profit personnel, community and congregational leaders are welcome to attend. Since 2007, the BuildaBridge Institute has partnered with Eastern University as an educational alliance for the Master of Arts Degree in Urban Studies: Community Arts Concentration.

DURATION: 9 day, 2 day, & 1 day courses

SPONSOR/ PRESENTER: Intermedia Arts

PROGRAM: Creative Community Leadership Institute

LOCATION: Minneapolis/St. Paul and selected communities in Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota

DESCRIPTION: Intermedia Arts' Creative Community Leadership Institute (CCLI) fosters healthy, capable and equitable communities by building the skills and network of leaders working at the intersection of the arts and community change. Founded in 2002 by some of the foremost practitioners and thinkers in the field of arts-based community development, CCLI has trained more than 230 active, cross-sector changemakers and creative placemakers.

This intensive five-month program of hands-on workshops and on-site experiences is designed to build capacity for arts-based community development partnerships in service to communities facing rapid change and complex issues. The program is rooted in the belief that for communities to thrive we need creative leaders who can engage people across large divides and establish enough common ground to develop cooperative and just solutions. These are the skills the Creative Community Leadership Institute builds.

The CCLI alumni network includes community-engaged artists, and community leaders working to make positive change in education, environment, food systems, government, health, housing, jobs, labor, philanthropy, public policy, racial justice, transportation, and youth development. CCLI is supported by the Bush Foundation.

PROGRAM: Cross-Sector Leadership Institute and Collaborative Solutions Lab

LOCATION: San Francisco, CA, US audience

DESCRIPTION: With anchor partners the White House Office of Social Innovation and Civic Participation, Office of Personnel Management, and the Presidio Trust, the Cross Sector Leadership Fellows program will develop leaders that can engage and collaborate to greater effect across business, government and non-profit sectors.

Collaborative Solutions Lab is a fast-paced and highly engaging innovation experience with a focus on "learning by doing" and a bias toward action. In a matter of hours, participants create innovative solutions to internal, business, or social challenges that they can start testing immediately. These solutions come with built-in buy-in from participants who take ownership as co-creators. Facilitated by expert team members from SMALLIFY, the lab practices are accessible and easy to use so that participants can reapply the practices to address future challenges. In addition to generating solutions to specific challenges, every lab fosters collaboration and provides participants with critical skills in problem definition, creative problem solving, end-user empathy, rapid prototyping, decision-making, and a mindset for innovation.

PROGRAM: Moving Field Guide

LOCATION: Tacoma Park, MD, US audience

DESCRIPTION: An environmental experience partnering artists and scientists

The Moving Field Guide, conceived and directed by choreographer and Dance Exchange Artistic Director Cassie Meador, is an interactive experience led by Dance Exchange artists, naturalists, and regional experts in ecology. Moving Field Guide projects look at how the arts can offer creative tools for knowing a place, not just using a place. The project provides people across generations an opportunity to get outdoors and gain a lasting understanding of the natural world. Participants move through experiences that build upon discovery, appreciation, recognition, and stewardship of the environment.

During this immersive experience participants activate their senses and observation skills through a series of outdoor movement activities. Combining an artistic and ecological approach to learning, Moving Field Guides help participants to consider the beauty, complexity, and human impact on the environment around them.

CCLI DESIGN STANDARDS

One significant challenge facing any program redesign effort is retaining the qualities that have made it successful in the first place. With regard to CCLI, some have referred these qualities as the program's "special sauce". To identify these qualities, we felt the best way forward was to consult with the experts, namely, the programs graduates. As such, the design standards phase of this research effort was developed in consultation with an Advisory Group comprised of 11 CCLI alumni, plus key faculty, and Intermedia Arts staff.

This process, which was initiated in the fall of 2015, began with one-on-one interviews conducted with each of the Advisory Group members. In these discussions, interviewees were asked first, how CCLI had advanced their work, and then, what aspects of the program they felt most contributed to this growth. Their responses were compiled and presented back to Advisory Group members at a one-day CCLI design standards retreat (See Appendix A). The Advisory Group's task was framed as follows:

We have a resource called CCLI that feedback from participants and impact research says benefits participants and communities in multiple ways. Thus far, in over 12 years, a little more than 200 people in 4 communities in our region have been able to participate in it. We know from our research that beyond the direct benefits to participants, there are multiplier effects at work here. Put simply, CCLI graduates individually and collectively spread the wealth, which in turn increases the beneficial impact for the community at large.

We are gathered here because Intermedia Arts is interested in exploring how to make this resource more available to more people and more communities. Our task is to explore what guidelines and standards should inform the CCLI re-design process with an emphasis on this question.

If CCLI is reconfigured what are the MUST HAVE learning experiences that will be needed to make sure it maintains its positive impact on participants and communities?

The Advisory Group members were asked to answer this question focusing on learning outcomes rather than specific circular elements. The input they provided was shared and clustered in three broad areas relevant to the design of a new, more accessible version of the CCLI program (See Appendix B). These were:

- A. Pedagogy: Learning Strategies, Format & Structure
- B. Curricular Content: Foundations and Skill Building
- C. Field Building: Strengthening the CCLI Network

Using the input from the Advisors as a foundation, we then developed a set of draft design standards to guide the future development of CCLI. These draft guidelines are shared here with the understanding that they will be reviewed and further refined by Intermedia Arts staff and Advisors.

CCLI 2.0 DESIGN DRAFT STANDARDS

A. PEDAGOGY: LEARNING STRATEGIES, FORMAT & STRUCTURE

1. Learning Strategies

- 1.1 A rigorous selection process that gives applicants an opportunity to share their unique aspirations and worldviews, and produces a diverse community of participants.
- 1.2 A sequential, enquiry-based learning approach that is framed by overarching themes and questions.
- 1.3 An arts-infused experiential curriculum that incorporates different ways of learning.
- 1.4 An emphasis on the importance of engaging the head, the hand, and the heart in learning.
- 1.5 A curriculum that reflects the unique conditions and needs of the host community.

1.6 Sustained opportunities for learning deeply with others who have different backgrounds and perspectives.

1.7 Intensive and sustained collaborative learning activities that strengthen partnership and network development skills.

1.8 A cross-sector focus in both curriculum and pedagogy that manifests through learning content, and the composition of both the facilitation team and cohort.

1.9 An emphasis on peer learning using adaptive, self-organizing processes and structures.

1.10 An adaptive, asset-based approach to group learning that consciously draws from the skills and experience within the cohort and community.

1.11 A transparent feedback process for contemporaneous review and revision of the curriculum

2. Format and Structure

2.1. An overall program design reflecting the principle that “everything is curriculum.”

2.2. A rigorous and transformative learning environment supported by a balanced mix of the novel and the familiar.

2.3. Opportunities to learn about and convene at local sites that exemplify the work and support the building of a community of practice.

2.4. A mix of assignments, activities, and exercises that allows for large-group, small-group and individual learning.

2.5. Curricular material from a diversity of sources: historic, emerging academic and non-academic.

2.6. A structure that provides the clarity, consistency, and continuity needed for flexible and responsive training.

2.7. Repeating elements or rituals that are used to facilitate the group’s work together.

2.8. Flexible roles for program leadership that balance teaching, mentoring, coaching, and facilitation.

2.9. A well-hosted learning environment that is equitable, “safe enough” and responsive to emerging and challenging questions, ideas, and lessons.

2.10. An accessible learning community that supports full participation for participants with diverse needs and capacities (Ex. childcare, flexible schedule).

2.11. A curriculum and learning environment that is simple, spacious, and outrageously useful.

B. CURRICULAR CONTENT: FOUNDATIONS AND SKILL BUILDING

1. Foundations

1.1. Challenge participants to examine their motivations for engaging in this difficult work.

1.2. Provide opportunities for participants to explore how their strengths and weaknesses can advance and/or limit their effectiveness in community work.

1.3. Provide participants opportunities to explore how their strengths and weaknesses can advance and/or limit their effectiveness in community work.

1.4. Provide tools and strategies for examining the assumptions participants carry about themselves and their partner communities.

1.5. Provide for the development and use of individual and organizational standards of practice in ABCD work.

1.6. Make use of previously successful CCLI standards, guiding principles, structures, pedagogy, and curricular elements.

1.7. Explore the language, theories, ideas, history, and concepts that define exemplary ABCD work.

1.8. Share stories and case studies to increase understanding and awareness of the creative process and its application as a tool for social change.

1.9. Emphasize best practices from both the community development and the community arts sectors (Ex. asset based, collective impact, sustainable practice, and cultural democracy).

2. Skill Building

2.1. Provide opportunities to learn and practice effective collaboration and partnership development.

2.2. Strengthen capacities to work effectively with networks and systems and across community sectors.

2.3. Include the exploration of relevant strategies and skill development in the areas of evaluation, communication, and funding.

2.4. Explore the structure and dynamics of the social and cultural ecosystems in communities and strategies for working effectively within them.

2.5. Integrate learning and reflection about power dynamics including race, rank, and privilege into the totality of the curriculum.

2.6. Emphasize assertive, inquiry-based learning, deep listening, and adaptive leadership as keys to successful work in change-constant environments. Provide tools, skills and practice in the areas of self-organizing, effective partnership development, and sustainable development.

2.7. Emphasize the importance of self-care by improving skills for living and working with resiliency.

C. FIELD BUILDING: STRENGTHENING THE CCLI NETWORK

1. Teach, support, and stimulate network-weaving practice among participants.

2. Integrate the experience, wisdom, and stories of the CCLI alumni network into the curriculum.

3. Graduate participants with a support system and a new confidence in the possibility of collective imagination.

4. Provide post-program access to resources that support participants continued learning. (Ex. case studies, stories, readings, media, and network development opportunities).

5. Institute a regular series of CCLI alumni activities and events.

6. Establish an online forum for sharing, exchange, and referral among CCLI alumni.

7. Provide support for participants to continue their work after CCLI participation in the areas that are most interesting or challenging to them.

8. Invite network members and supporters to contribute to the ongoing development of the program and its network.

9. Provide support for alumni-facilitated network development.

10. Create a support system that cultivates the use of arts-based community development with integrity and ethical responsibility.

Appendix C: Exploring Community Arts Training & Interest

In recent years, an increasing number of artists and arts organizations have been joining in partnerships with other community sectors to advance the healthy development of their communities. The result is a proliferation of cross sector collaborations and opportunities. Some local arts agencies and others have recognized that the organizations and individuals involved in these collaborations could benefit from professional development and skill building that supports effective community arts partnerships.

Animating Democracy at Americans for the Arts and Minneapolis' Intermedia Arts, Arts (MN) are collaborating on research to find out where this kind of training is currently taking place and where there may be future interest. The resulting documentation will be an important resource for organizations and community leaders interested in both learning from, and supporting best practices in, this growing arena of cultural work. As a part of this effort we invite you to complete the following survey. Thank you for your willingness to participate. In appreciation, all participants will receive a summary of our survey findings.

DRAWING: We know how busy you are, so as an incentive, we will include the names of all those who complete the survey BY MIDNIGHT FRIDAY, OCTOBER 9, 2015, in a drawing to win a new iPad Mini 2.! The winner will be notified by email by October 23, 2015.

This survey is being conducted by an independent evaluator working with The Center for the Study of Art & Community. PLEASE NOTE: If you do not finish the survey you can return using the link provided as long as you log on with the same computer. If you experience any problems with the survey please contact William Cleveland at the Center for the Study of Art and Community: bill@artandcommunity.com.

CENTER FOR THE STUDY OF ART & COMMUNITY

CSA&C is an association of creative community leaders who work to build bridges between the arts and a wide range of community, public and private sector interests. We assert that the future health of our communities will demand an expanded role for creative thinking and practice at every level. To that end, CSA&C helps grow new working relationships between the arts and the broader community. For more information about the Center's services please visit

Intermedia Arts is a premier multidisciplinary, multicultural arts organization in Minneapolis, Minnesota whose mission is to be a catalyst that builds understanding among people through art.

The Creative Community Leadership Institute (CCLI) is a program of Intermedia Arts that fosters healthy, capable and equitable communities by building the skills and network of leaders working at the intersection of the arts and community change. CCLI is rooted in the belief that communities facing rapid change and complex issues can make real progress when people come together across disciplines, sectors and boundaries to collaborate, innovate, think big, and act artfully for community-driven change. For communities to thrive, we need creative leaders who can engage people across large divides and establish enough common ground to develop cooperative and just solutions. These are the skills the Creative Community Leadership Institute builds. This study was commissioned by Intermedia Arts to inform the ongoing improvement of the organization's creative leadership programs. It was prepared by the Center for the Study of Art and Community, and carried out in association with Americans for the Arts / Animating Democracy.

The Creative Community Leadership Institute, and this study have been made possible through the generous support of the Bush Foundation.
